Phoenix, Arizona

+Patrick Black works in our natural resources, energy and environmental law group, where he focuses primarily on energy regulatory matters. Patrick represents large industrial customers, renewable energy developers and independent producers, in matters before the Arizona Corporation Commission and Arizona Power Plant and Line Siting Committee. Patrick also represents both utilities and developers before the Arizona Corporation Commission and local municipalities on water and wastewater utility matters. Currently, Patrick is focused on Arizona's Energy Modernization efforts, focusing on emerging technologies, clean tech and the integration of renewable energy into the transmission grid. Patrick is heavily involved in Arizona's move towards competitive retail markets in electricity.
