Tyler Carlton is an associate who works in our business litigation practice group out of our Phoenix office. Tyler has worked in the federal and state judiciaries—including the Ninth Circuit, the Federal District Court for the District of Arizona, and the Arizona Supreme Court—where he refined his litigation skills. He is adept at appellate work, motion practice and strategy, legal research, and reviewing and synthesizing complicated records.

Originally from Boston, Tyler participated in mock trials for all four years in college. He thoroughly enjoyed developing persuasive case theories and the pressure of having to think on his feet. This experience led him to law school where these skills and his ability to write was the catalyst for his career today here in Phoenix, which Tyler considers one of the great legal markets in the country. He loves to battle on behalf of his clients, always asking the question, “how do we win?!”

Tyler is married and enjoys spending time with his wife, Madison, and their rescue Chihuahua, Oreo. Away from work, you’ll probably find Tyler golfing, cycling, and traveling.
