San Bernardino, California

Kevin Abbott is a director in our Business Litigation practice group who works out of our San Bernardino office. His practice focuses on labor and employment defense (individual and class/PAGA), intellectual property/trade secrets, construction, contract disputes, lease disputes, real property litigation and appellate proceedings. He's also well-versed in jury trials, court trials, arbitration hearings, settlements in and out of mediation, summary judgment and motions to dismiss.

Originally from Yorba Linda, California, Kevin has always been a scholar and found law school to be fairly easy – actually working at the on-campus burger joint as a way of placing his brain in a different space outside of the study of law. Throughout his career, he has enjoyed bringing peace to peoples' lives and passionately working with business owners so they really “feel” what litigation is all about, including their partners and customers and everyone involved in the enterprise. Kevin is aggressive in his representation when necessary, but he also has the ability to offer settlements or arbitration, and avoid costly litigation when possible. At the end of the day, Kevin gets to the heart of the matter for his clients: never litigating just for the sake of litigation.

Outside of work, Kevin's life is a joyful blur managing a family, which includes four young children. He also enjoys playing hoops and watching sports where his favorite teams include the Angels and Lakers. Kevin is also learning how to play the electric guitar.
