

JAY M. BULGER

Jay Bulger is a Director in Fennemore's Business Litigation practice group. He assists clients with complex defect claims involving scientific, engineering, architectural, mechanical, and related issues for builders, developers, and manufacturers.

Jay has experience with litigation and arbitration involving construction defects, manufacturing and design product defects, contract disputes, and delay claims. He also handles matters involving personal injury claims related to jobsite accidents, premises liability, chemical exposure, automobile accidents, and product defects.

Prior to joining Fennemore, Jay was a Partner at a law firm specializing in representing builders and developers. There, he focused his practice on construction claims and catastrophic injury, and accident litigation. He earned his law degree from California Western School of Law. During that time, he interned for the Honorable Irma E. Gonzalez, U.S. District Court, Southern District of California. He also worked for the California Western Law Review as the Associate Notes and Comment Editor.

Jay's work ethic, incredible attention to detail, and deep knowledge of complex technical issues provide his clients with effective representation from case inspection to trial.

Outside of the office, Jay enjoys spending time with his wife, Wendy and three children: Cate, Will, and Samantha. He also enjoys hiking, trail running, endurance races, golf, and tennis.
