TAYLOR K. GOULD

Taylor Gould is a Business and Finance associate in the Reno office, where she focuses her practice on regulatory and administrative law matters for financial institutions, gaming and hospitality, public utilities, and other companies subject to government regulation. She helps businesses comply with regulatory requirements, licensing, and other procedures before administrative agencies and governmental bodies.

Taylor is part of a team that supports regulated companies with transactions, operational compliance, and licensing and permitting. She also represents clients in litigation matters, including contract disputes and trusts and estates litigation. Taylor leverages her regulatory and litigation experience to serve as associate general counsel to a credit union with over 1.7 billion in assets and more than 88,000 members.

She returned to her hometown of Reno, Nevada after working for three years at Cahill Gordon & Reindel in New York, NY, where she handled litigation and regulatory matters for financial institutions and public service projects. Taylor also brings valuable insights from an externship with the United States District Court for the District of Nevada. While at the University of Virginia School of Law, she served on the Editorial Board of the Virginia Journal of Law and Politics and was a semi-finalist in the UNC Craven Moot Court Competition. Taylor completed her undergraduate studies at Hamilton College, graduating magna cum laude in Government, and gained experience in government services through internships with the Offices of U.S. Senator Harry Reid and Kirsten Gillibrand. In her free time, Taylor loves skiing, hiking, and being on the water in Lake Tahoe.
