TIMOTHY B. ANDERSON

Timothy B. Anderson is an economic development and infrastructure finance lawyer with more than 20 years of experience advising clients on public finance, project finance, and complex economic development transactions across the United States. He represents municipalities, corporations, developers, and institutional stakeholders in a wide range of taxable and tax-exempt bond financings, public-private partnerships, and corporate bond issuances.

Tim serves in multiple key roles in financing transactions, including bond counsel, underwriter and placement agent counsel, issuer counsel, and developer counsel, with additional experience in secondary market transactions. His practice covers both public offerings and private placements, providing strategic guidance to school districts, townships, and other municipal entities throughout Pennsylvania, as well as to clients in the healthcare, manufacturing, commercial, broadband, renewable energy, and education sectors nationwide. Tim also provides general counsel services to companies, with respect to their roles in infrastructure and economic development projects.

With a strong focus on infrastructure finance and capital markets, Tim advises on sophisticated financial structures, including security instrument transactions, bond monetizations, repurchase agreements, stand-by letters of credit, and mid-term note programs. He is also experienced in navigating secondary market transactions, helping clients maximize value and manage risk in evolving financial environments.

In addition to his public finance work, Tim counsels Native American tribes on economic development initiatives, including matters involving tribal sovereignty and financing structures. He also has extensive experience with USDA financing programs, supporting infrastructure and development projects across rural and underserved communities throughout the country.

Tim serves as Deputy General Counsel to the Vidocq Society, an international crime-solving organization based in Philadelphia, where law enforcement agencies from around the world collaborate to review and advance cold cases.

Before joining Fennemore, Tim practiced at nationally recognized Am Law firms and prominent Philadelphia-based law firms, further strengthening his experience in corporate law, infrastructure finance, and complex transactional matters.
