CATHERINE RENSHAW

Catherine Renshaw helps employers navigate immigration matters in which timing, compliance, and the strength of the record can have significant business consequences. Based in Boise, she advises businesses on employment-based visa petitions and immigration-related employment matters, including I-9 compliance, and represents clients before U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, immigration court, and the federal courts, including the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Catherine begins by identifying the client's underlying business objective—whether an employer needs to recruit or retain an employee, address a compliance concern, respond to government scrutiny, or preserve its options in a contested matter. She then develops a practical strategy, explains the available options and risks in clear terms, and identifies the documentation and next steps needed to move the matter forward. Her approach emphasizes responsiveness, realistic expectations, and solutions that account for both legal requirements and operational impact.

FOR EMPLOYERS AND CORPORATE CLIENTS

Catherine advises businesses on immigration-related employment matters, from employment-based visa petitions to I-9 compliance. She helps employers understand how immigration requirements affect hiring, onboarding, continued employment, and compliance obligations. Her guidance is designed to give business leaders and human resources professionals clear action items, reduce avoidable disruption, and keep immigration strategy aligned with the organization's broader business needs.

Catherine also writes regularly about developments affecting employers and foreign-national employees, including H-1B policy, USCIS site visits, immigration onboarding, adjustment of status, and changes in federal immigration policy. Her work reflects a sustained focus on helping employers anticipate rapidly changing requirements and prepare their teams before an issue becomes urgent.

A LITIGATION-INFORMED, PRACTICAL APPROACH

Before joining Fennemore, Catherine practiced exclusively in immigration law. She previously clerked for Idaho Supreme Court Justice John R. Stegner, where she prepared case analyses, drafted court decisions, and conducted extensive legal research. She also gained advocacy experience through the University of Idaho Immigration Litigation and Appellate Clinic.

That background informs how Catherine identifies dispositive issues, evaluates evidence, develops the record, and prepares matters for potential agency scrutiny or appellate review. Not every matter requires litigation, but her experience helps her recognize when the factual record, procedural posture, or preservation of an issue may affect the client's options later. She has represented a detained asylum seeker through the Ninth Circuit Pro Bono Program.

Catherine is also an adjunct instructor at the University of Idaho College of Law, where she teaches legal reasoning and bar preparation strategies. Her teaching experience reinforces a central feature of her practice: translating complex legal standards into clear, usable guidance.

Catherine is admitted to practice in Idaho and Washington, the U.S. District Court for the District of Idaho, and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.
